

Digital resources make it easy for students to learn whatever subjects they're focusing on at any given time. Teachers no longer need to worry about keeping textbook editions up to date with lessons their students are studying in class. Instead, they can focus on teaching the important subjects instead of worry about replacing outdated textbooks with each semester. Digital resources make it easy for teachers to assign readings, answer questions, and allow students to fully understand the material being taught during class. Digital also makes it easier for teachers to assign additional material to be studied by students during their spare time. The result is that students learn much more material than would otherwise be possible without extra help from teachers and online tutors.

Digital resources replace textbooks because they're cheaper, more convenient, and have lots of potential uses in education and life beyond education itself. Students save money by only needing one computer instead of dozens of textbooks, and internet access allows teachers to provide help whenever necessary without printing new textbooks first. Digital resources make it easy for schools to assign lessons, homework assignments, reports, attendance, and other tasks associated with schooling new generations of humans effectively and efficiently via online tutors or automated systems that identify problematic behaviour patterns in school performance through artificial intelligence algorithms- basically anything that can enhance the learning process through technological advancements beyond the scope of the average human mind set and brain power quotient coupled with God only knows how many years worth of accumulated human knowledge base that is critical thinking at its most untraditional levels ever since the dawn of recorded human civilization in ancient Egypt through the abolishment of slavery as mankind' final evolutionary step toward full consciousness as body consciousness transforms into a unified field consciousness via the merging of both energy bodies into one all encompassing divine being aka Oneness Consciousness resulting in metaphysical kinetic energy body enlightenment corporeal transference wherein our physical matter consisting of both bones & blood cells now transmuting into pure light or pure love (aka Angelic Light Body Ascension).
